again when you're ready.

"Young Idaho," smiled the Chief, "everyone finishes The Long Walk in their own time, there's no right or wrong moment to get there. It doesn't matter if you set off again tomorrow or two summers from now."

He put his paw round Idaho's shoulder and guided him out to the village bonfire where the rest of his clan crowded round telling that he was already on the road by getting ready to try another time.

You'll get there!

Great try!
